Story of Her Wanderings.

According to the girl's story, instead of going to school Friday morning she went to Derby and spent the day wandering around the town, not even looking up friends she had in that place. On the afternoon of the same day she returned to New Haven the train and took a local train for New York. She did not buy a ticket and when she paid her fare the conductor usked her where she was going and when the told him to New York to visit her aunt. On the arrival of the train at the Lexington avenue station it was dark and she was afraid to venture out on the streets and spent the might orated by information secured by the family previous to her arrival.

She arrived here about noon and went directly to her home. Her mind is not quite clear as to all that transpired.

She arrived here about noon and went directly to her home. Her mind is not quite clear as to all that transpired while she was in New York, but she insists that other than going out onto the street for a few times, where she remained but for a few minutes cach time, she did not leave the two stations.

According to members of the family, the matron at the Grand Central staturday night where she was going and was told New Haven. The matron told her where the train went and left her in the women's waiting room. Other parts of her story are corrobouted by information secured by the family previous to her arrival.
